

#397 The First Oswald Head Wound – Richard Oswald was Britain’s Chief Negotiator of the September 3, 1783, Treaty of Paris

Now we come to the stout topics of The First Oswald Head Wound and (soon) The Second Oswald Head Wounds (plural), which relate directly to The Deadly Wound of the Beast, Phase II. We will be returning to The Deadly Wound of the Beast, Phase II and the Vietnam War, but not until some time has passed and we have notably magnified our understandings in several other areas.

The First Oswald Head Wound

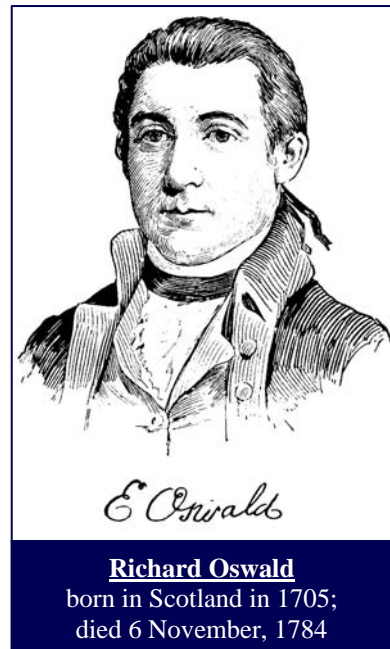

The September 3, 1783, Treaty of Paris represented the official end of the American Revolutionary War as Great Britain officially recognized American independence.

Representing Great Britain as its chief negotiator of what became the September 3, 1783, Treaty of Paris was wealthy merchant Richard Oswald. The signer for Great Britain of the Treaty of Paris was David Hartley.

The negotiators for the United States of America were Benjamin Franklin, John Jay, and John Adams, all of whom also signed the treaty.

Key Understanding: Richard Oswald, the first Oswald. The Lord ordained a man named Oswald to be Britain’s primary negotiator of the Treaty of Paris, which officially handed Great Britain its defeat in the Revolutionary War and finalized the birth of the United States as the Scarlet Beast out of the Pit.

Here is #397–Doc 1, which explains that Richard Oswald was Britain’s chief negotiator of the Treaty of Paris.
