Below is the content of the introduction to the Wikipedia article on The Wall Street Crash of 1929:

The Wall Street Crash of 1929, also known as the Crash of '29, was the most devastating stock market crash in the history of the United States, taking into consideration the full scope and longevity of its fallout. Three phrases – Black Thursday, Black Monday, and Black Tuesday – are used to describe this collapse of stock values. All three are appropriate, for the crash was not a one day affair. The initial crash occurred on Black Thursday (October 24, 1929), but it was the catastrophic downturn of Black Monday and Tuesday (October 28 and October 29, 1929) that precipitated widespread panic and the onset of unprecedented and long-lasting consequences for the United States. The collapse continued for a month. Economists and historians disagree as to what role the crash played in subsequent economic, social, and political events. The crash in America came near the beginning of the Great Depression, a period of economic decline in the industrialized nations, and led to the institution of landmark financial reforms and new trading regulations. At the time of the crash, New York City had grown to be a major metropolis, and its Wall Street district was one of the world's leading financial centers. The New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) was the largest stock market in the world. The Roaring Twenties was a time of prosperity and excess in the city, and, despite warnings against speculation, many believed that the market could sustain high price levels. Shortly before the crash, Irving Fisher famously proclaimed, "Stock prices have reached what looks like a permanently high plateau." The euphoria and financial gains of the great bull market were shattered on Black Thursday, when share prices on the NYSE collapsed. Stock prices fell on that day and they continued to fall, at an unprecedented rate, for a full month.

Huge crowds gather outside the Sub Treasury Building (now Federal Hall National Memorial) and around the statue of George Washington, opposite the New York Stock Exchange, at the time of the Wall Street Crash in October 1929. The Statue of Washington commemorates where he was sworn in as the first President of the United States by Robert R. Livingston on April 30, 1789.
